E-mailing Pictures from a Camera A good way to transfer images from your camera to your computer is to use your camera's memory card reader. Some newer cameras use SDXC memory cards, but most use SD cards, so feel free to use the latter. Following are the steps to transfer images from your camera to your computer:

1. Connect your camera to the computer.
2. Insert the memory card, and open the card reader program on the computer, which may be a built-in reader or one that you download from a website.
3. Open the Memory Card browser and navigate to the pictures you want to transfer.
4. Select the images you want to transfer by scrolling through the images in the photo browser and clicking on the selection button to highlight each image you want.
5. When you've selected all the images you want to transfer, press the Enter button on your keyboard to open the file browser window for the card.
6. Choose the file or folder where you'd like the images to be stored. You can also open the images on the camera, like you would in a slide show, and copy them to your computer.
7. In the file browser, click on the Import menu and choose Import Photos from Camera (see Figure 4-4). The images are imported to the folder you selected when you opened the card viewer.
8. Click on the Open Folder button to view the images on your computer.
9. To open your favorite image editor, choose it from the Open With menu. Figure 4-4: In the File Browser, select Import Photos from Camera. Note that the pictures you import appear as JPEGs on your computer's hard drive. If you want to convert them to another format, you can use the Save As menu to change them. If you want to go back and edit the images you've just imported, you can use your image editor to do so. Sending Photos by e-mail is easy with a few clicks. Choose File Send As E-mail Photo; the e-mail is sent to your Contacts list or to any recipient you choose, as shown in Figure 4-5. The e-mail message includes the original file, a text message with

In some parts of the country, oak trees are the only type of tree that can be found. The U.S. Forest Service has found that this is true in two states in the Northeast: Massachusetts and New Hampshire. But what about the other states? To find out, the U.S. Forest Service's National Urban Forests Program created this map showing the "tree type" (as the map puts it) of every county in the country. The map was compiled using the 2012 second and third National Forest Inventory (NFI) data. Here's a clue: when you see big fields of oak trees, you're probably in New York. The result is both stunning and utterly unsurprising, but it certainly doesn't mean that all counties in the U.S. are as oak-rich as New York's Westchester County. Here's a close-up view of the U.S.: To make some of the more distant places on the map more legible, I added some stylized, abstract, but convincing icons to indicate what kind of tree is likely to be in the area. The first map comes from the Bureau of Labor Statistics and shows the number of people working as an "agricultural laborer," a category that includes farm laborers as well as many who work in "green" jobs in forestry, horticulture, nurseries, etc. For the second map I used population data from the U.S. Census Bureau's 2013 American Community Survey. Now let's compare the map to another map from the same Bureau of Labor Statistics, this time showing the number of "agricultural laborers" by county in 2013, broken down by race and Hispanic origin: That's a lot of oak trees. It's worth noting that the above maps come with an important disclaimer: they are based on the NFI's county-level data, which says nothing about the types of trees that may be growing in between the county boundaries. So for example, it's possible that a county like San Diego that's been planted with thousands of pine trees in the San Diego suburb of Chula Vista will have a lot of oak trees. The county boundaries aren't helpful for this purpose. But even so, let's put these

A five-year follow-up of endovascular treatment of carotid pseudoaneurysms: treatment experience in 38 patients and review of the literature. The aim of this study was to report our experience in endovascular management of 38 patients with carotid pseudoaneurysms (PSAs) and to review the literature on this topic. This series is a retrospective study. Patient records were reviewed for clinical presentation, imaging studies, management techniques, types of PSAs and treatments performed, complications, and follow-up. A PubMed database search was conducted for the period 1996-2008. The most common cause of PSA in this series was infection ($n = 27$, 71%), and the most common location was the carotid bifurcation ($n = 17$, 45%). The majority of patients in this series were treated with stenting using manual injection or embolic coils and self-expanding nitinol stents ($n = 20$, 53%). One-year patency was 94% (22 of 23) when considering only covered stents. A successful closure of the pseudoaneurysm was achieved in 85% of the patients ($n = 29$). Distal embolization was reported in 14% of cases ($n = 5$). Clinical follow-up (mean, 27 months) was performed in 23 patients (61%). In 3 patients, a symptomatic recurrent PSA developed, and endovascular treatment was performed successfully. Our reported experience with 38 patients and review of the literature show that PSA poses a difficult therapeutic challenge. The optimal management of this lesion remains controversial. Endovascular techniques combined with appropriate adjuvant therapy and patient selection have a high success rate. The occurrence of stenosis or thrombosis within the PSA or distal embolization rate is relatively low. Based on our results, we propose that endovascular therapy should be considered the first-line treatment for patients with asymptomatic PSAs. Phylogeny and history of the duck genus Anas: molecular evidence and a new model for the subfamily Anatinae (Anseriformes: Anatidae). The subfamily Anatinae consists of approximately 40 species of ducks in a diverse group of mainly African sub-Saharan hosts. Phylogenetic analyses of mtDNA show that this group is polyphyletic and a taxonomic revision is needed. We performed a morphological and molecular phylogenetic analysis of members of the anatinae
