The comments come two days after both U.S. and Iranian officials said that there was a "good deal" that the two sides were close to agreeing on for President Barack Obama's much-criticized trip to Iran. Iran says its nuclear program is a peaceful one to generate electricity. The U.S. and its allies fear Iran is seeking to build nuclear weapons. Mohammad Khorami, Iran's parliamentary speaker, said that the issue of uranium enrichment is "non-negotiable" for Tehran, but he gave no details of the offer that was reportedly discussed with the U.S. He confirmed that a meeting between U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry and Iran's foreign minister, Mohammed Javad Zarif, had taken place and that "big progress" was being made. Iran has rejected previous proposals for curbing its nuclear activities as unacceptable. It says it does not want nuclear weapons and is only interested in a peaceful
