DUBAI, United Arab Emirates (AP) — Authorities in the United Arab Emirates say a diplomat has tested positive for the new coronavirus and is being treated at a hospital in the country's capital, Abu Dhabi. NTC news agency said Wednesday the diplomat, who it did not identify, was traveling between Asian countries where the virus originated. The diplomat had been held under quarantine since Feb. 27, and on Monday, "samples taken from the body of the diplomat tested positive for the virus," the news agency said. The UAE has had no reported cases of the virus. NTC said the diplomat is a high-ranking member of the UAE's diplomatic corps. It said the man is in good health, but not in a life-threatening condition. A Dubai news site, 7Days.ae, reported that the diplomat lives in a high-end apartment building in Dubai where four people have tested positive for the virus. This invention relates to an interleaving circuit for communication systems, in particular, for an optically mediated communication systems for implementing the same. In the receiver part of an optically mediated communication system, an incoming serial data stream must be converted to parallel data before the data is demodulated and processed in the digital domain. In the transmit part, the data must be converted from parallel to serial form. If the serial data signal has an excessive amount of fluctuation in the amplitude, for example, caused by the signal-to-noise ratio (SNR) of the channel, this may hinder the transfer of the serial data signal to the optical medium. To counter this problem, the incoming serial data signal is interleaved with other incoming serial data signals before the serial data signal is converted into parallel data for transmission across the optical medium. An interleaving circuit is well known in the art and is described by L. J. Coroller, "A Survey of Techniques for Reducing the Effects of Pilot-Contamination in PSK Modulation," IEEE Transaction on Communication, Vol. Com-28, No. 2, February 1980. In a conventional optical communication system, the amplitude fluctuation that is caused by a channel SNR is in the order of ten to one, e.g., 100 dB. The interleaving process, however, increases the amplitude of the incoming serial data signal by the amount necessary to provide the amplitude fluctuation needed to transfer the signal across the medium. In addition to providing an interleaving process which reduces the amplitude fluctuation caused by a channel SNR, the interleaving process must also act as a noise reducer and reduce the effect of non-linearity of the medium, such as an optical fiber, to reduce the bit error rate (BER) of the system. Thus, the conventional interleaving process is a trade-off between increasing the amplitude of the incoming serial data signal and reducing the amplitude fluctuation of the serial data signal caused by the channel SNR. Conventional interleaving circuits are used in many applications. For example, optical communication systems, such as the SLED (Super Light Emitting Diode) or MOD (Matched Optical Dual) communication systems using a semiconductor optical amplifier or a laser diode as a transmitter, have a channel SNR of 100 dB or less. In the SLED system, an incoming data signal is modulated by a carrier signal having a frequency of 23.5 GHz using a phase-

FANTASY XV: The Lost Chapters has a mixed reception after its release after it was released a day early to North America last week, and it's no surprise why. Chapter 1 of The Lost Chapters received a positive reception, but Chapter 3 definitely didn't.
