Please note that the latest version of the extension is a beta version for Chrome. The extension is a free download from the Chrome Web Store, but this blog post does not provide a promotional link. Instead, we would like to recommend that you visit the official Web Search Navigator website and try it out for yourself. We have seen a lot of people who spent too much time on social networking sites, such as Facebook, Pinterest, Twitter, Reddit, and others. While they may seem like fun and enjoyable sites, they can turn out to be quite addicting. Learning to work through the social media sites so that you can better manage your time can be very helpful. Having a plan in place and knowing what to do on your own time can save you from getting into these social networking sites too often and then letting the free time fly by. Get the pomodoro-technique There is nothing more annoying than spending all day on social networking sites only to find out that you are absolutely tired and not in the mood to do anything else. Tiredness can be hard to avoid, though, and having an effective tool will help you get more done. It is common to see people fall into the social networking frenzy where they lose track of how much time they spend on these sites. This will cause you to work far too hard to get some much-needed relaxation and quiet time. Use pomodoro-technique to take control of your social networking usage. It's a useful time management technique that helps you get more done in the same amount of time as other people. To get started, install the Pomodoro Timer Chrome extension. After you have installed the extension, you will be given the option to start a new pomodoro. After setting the timer to 25 minutes, you will be prompted to record the time you spent on the site. After the pomodoro is over, you will be told how much time you saved during the work session. You can also set a monthly goal for time spent on the site, and the extension will help you figure out how much you need to work each day to reach that goal. It can get confusing for some people to manage how much time they have spent. Luckily, the Pomodoro Timer extension provides you with an easy way to do this and to record the time you spend on the site. You can also stay up to date with the full schedule for pomodoro.

It's a question that is becoming increasingly relevant as the market for enterprise and consumer smartphone sales are in decline. Revenue generated by RIM in the quarter declined, year-over-year, but the company is selling more phones at a loss, which has its own effect on the company. We've had plenty of discussion about the purchase of BlackBerry by a Chinese company, and the question on everyone's mind is whether the company has a bright future. It does, to some degree. The biggest question is whether BlackBerry will be able to maintain its position in the smartphone market, when their competitive position is strong, but the market for small smartphones is weakening. What is interesting about RIM is that they have continued to sell phones, even when the market has shrunk. And the company is showing signs of improving: in the third quarter of 2012 RIM sold 47.5 million phones, a strong increase of 5 percent over the prior year. Q2 2013 marked the strongest quarterly selling quarter of the company since Q1 2010, but the company needs a boost. RIM's tablet sales are down, as users move away from the BlackBerry PlayBook. Although RIM has the PlayBook, and continues to sell the tablet hardware, the company's ability to sell new hardware is clearly faltering. With the BlackBerry PlayBook, the company tried to create a new product, one that would establish itself within a market that is clearly becoming smaller. The decision to try to create a tablet platform that would eclipse the iPad seems to have been ill-advised: sales of the tablet, while not terrible, are not what they had hoped for. In Q2 2013, RIM sold 8.8 million PlayBooks, down from the 17.4 million it sold the year before. While the device is on its way out, RIM is also trying to figure out how to make more money with the older phone that is not going away. The BES phone platform is running pretty well. The BES 10.0 release contained a few bugs and the company is already preparing for the
