Turtle VR is a VR video game that brings your attention away from the screen and provides a new way to interact with Google's block-based programming language, Blockly. In Turtle VR, you can drive your own virtual turtle using just blocks. Create your own programs to draw stuff, explore in real 3D, and even speak! Begin by clicking and dragging blocks to create your own program, and then let a Turtle VR virtual turtle draw your creations in a new 3D world. By programming block-based programs, you can express ideas you can't otherwise express using a traditional UI, and explore in real 3D. He is also, as the movie's tag line states, 'the hardest cop to get killed. He's got a gun, badge and a whole lot of bullets'. The story centres on four 'Sci-Fists', ex-military intelligence operatives who've been out of action for ten years, but who are now back in action after a deadly threat from a Soviet spy in the United States. During his usual running of surveillance on the Soviet embassy, one of the Sci-Fists, Max (David McRaney) catches a glimpse of a woman with blood-red eyes and hair dyed black in a club, and then sees her die the next day. In his report to headquarters he details a blonde, swarthy man with a Gun, Badge and Full of Bullets who he manages to follow to his office, and is given the address of a Vice-President of a Pharmaceutical company. Nevertheless he still decides to take a risk and put two men on the case - veteran cop Schultz (Brent Briscoe), and rookie cops Kringle (Tom Arnold) and McClane (Harvey Keitel). Both kill the man in the vice-president's office, only Kringle discovers that the mysterious killer's real name is Max and immediately locks him up. However, when Kringle comes to him two days later to put his report together, Max
