We are currently converting from a single bus-type system to a system of 12 distribution boxes (3 phase meters on each) feeding the main switches.

We are currently taking meter readings every 20 minutes. This gives us a huge amount of data that we need to make sense of. I need to compare thousands of readings and determine which readings are similar and which are different. Many of the readings for the same period will be very similar so we want to combine them together to get a single reading for the same period. However, I am also trying to do things like calculate the average of the entire year of data to find if the system is over or underfeeding and I can't find anything on this. I looked on the Internet for a way to do the calculations and found something called the "Cycle counting process". It is not very clear and the instructions only reference the single-bus system. I am currently trying to use the code posted at Math.SE to convert it to my needs. In the end, I want to be able to create a new record (row) in a spreadsheet or database each time a new reading appears. So I need to create a unique identifier (ID) each time a new record is made. So that if I have two records that are a minute apart it should not be a problem. The ID will be based on a combination of time and 3 phase phase+direction. So the time part will be something like the date and time stamp, and the phase+direction part will be like the minutes that a reading was taken. e.g. 1) reading is taken at 1:17 PM 2/6/2020 and we are taking readings every 20 minutes so it will look like: 1:17,1:37,2:07 ,1:27,2:17,3:07,2:37,1:17, 2) reading is taken at 12:17 PM 2/6/2020 and we are taking readings every 20 minutes so it will look like: 12:17,12:37,1 2:57,1:17,1:37,1: 6d1f23a050
